Barium Springs, N. C.

We are herewith presenting the pictures of our 1949 Graduating Class. There are thirteen Barium Springs young people presented here and two from the neighborhood: At the Mills Home they call these "scrub orphans", but we want to think up a nicer name for them because all that we have in our school are mighty nice people. The two presented here are Dickie Arrowood and Ricky Lippard.

Here are the statistics on the other thirteen: Herbert Good has been in the orphanage longer than any other member of the class. He entered July 1st, 1935. All in all the thirteen members of this class have been living 245 years. 144 of these years have been at Barium Springs.

We are going to miss this class for a long time. Every one of the boys played on our football team; seven of them were starters. Seven boys played basketball, four in the starting lineup. Four are in the Glee Club. Among the girls three are basketball players; two are members of the Glee Club, and all of them have done their assignments in school and in work most acceptably. They are going to make good citizens wherever they go. They can do a surprising number of things well. Three of the girls are headed to W. C. U. N. C. Four of the boys are headed to Appalachian. If you run across one of these young people as your neighbor we think you will find that he or she is a good neighbor. We wish them Godspeed.

The Johnstons On The Prowl Again

By Jos. B. Johnston

A few years ago there was a very popular song, "Stars fell on Alabama". Well, during the last twelve months the Johnstons could have a song something like this, "Girl Babies Fell on the Johnston Family." Three grandchildren of the female variety arrived within the twelve months. On June 10, 1948, Elizabeth Dickey Johnston was born to Joe and Peggy. On October 13th, little Jane Ann was born to Bill and Nell Johnston. On January 15th, little Nancy Horne was born to Bob and Marjorie Johnston, and all of this entails a lot of responsibility to the grandparents.

It takes just a day to visit the Joe Johnstons in Concord and to check up on their two little girls. It takes a week-end to visit the Bob Johnstons in Charleston to see little Nancy and step-son, Joel. Then it takes a whole week to visit the Bill Johnstons and little Jane Ann because they live in New Albany, Indiana, and it takes quite a bit of arranging for a whole week. As a matter of fact, that does not happen once a year even, but on April 6th we started out for that visit. We left Barium at nine o'clock in the morning on a beautiful but windy April day. The previous day's rain had swept all the dust and smoke out of the nearby Blue Ridge and the trip up to Asheville was one of delight. The fact that we had made that trip many a time before did not lessen the pleasure of seeing it all again. A mid-day lunch in Asheville and then out through the Great Smokies. A new road had been built since our last trip that way, missing Waynesville by a few miles and taking us through Soco Gap. This was some added scenery which we had not expected and it was worth traveling over a second time, but we were on our way to New Found Gap and Clingman's Dome before the evening wore away. On Clingman's Dome we found plenty of snow and ice and we found that we could see part of Fontana Lake from that spot. It looked mighty far down. Before it was too late we drove down off the mountain and spent the night in Gatlinburg, Tennessee. It was quite warm there and that helped to make us realize that Gatlinburg is just a mile lower than Clingman's Dome where we were earlier in the afternoon. We had supper at a little cafe which was over the Little Pigeon River. The food was fair - the price was strictly for the tourist trade, but that of course goes with the trip. We spent the night at a Motor Court, run by a woman whose hobby is African Violets, and I had a lot of trouble on my hands the next morning getting Mrs. Johnston to leave without getting the personal history of every individual plant. However, we did manage to get away rather early. We stopped by Knoxville to get breakfast, and then on to Oak Ridge, that wonderful secret city which has just been opened to the public.

We spent several hours driving through the residential part of this place and another hour in the museum, but we never did see any of the plants where the miracles are being performed. We found out a lot of things about this city of about 35,000 people, something less than half its size at the peak of the war activities. There are seven little cities within this big city - trading centers with drug stores, grocery stores, dry goods stores, picture shows, etc. The houses are of a very temporary nature but are now being converted to more permanent structures. Their schools, athletic fields, places for games, park and everything but graveyards. After driving through that place and finally leaving this was the thing that struck me most forcibly - not an old person and not a graveyard in a city of 35,000 people. Would it not be wonderful if it could be like that all the time - if people did not get old and have to have special provision made for them and if no ground had to be set aside for graveyards. We do not want to spend too much time talking about Oak Ridge - just enough to whet your appetite so that you will take in this wonderful place the next time you are out near it.

After leaving Oak Ridge, we journeyed north and stopped for a few minutes at the Norris Dam, the first of the big storage dams of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Of course, the water was very low at this time, purposely so in order to hold back the Spring floods which have so often proved disastrous. The Tennessee is now under control and you can plant your garden right down to the edge of it without fear that it will be overrun - that is the river below the storage dam. Just to show that we know what we are talking about, these storage dams are, in addition to the Norris, the Cherokee on the Holston River, the Douglas on the French Broad, and Fontana on the Little Tennessee.

We had budgeted our time very carefully in order to arrive at New Albany at six P. M. We understood that something was cooking in preparation for our arrival. We also realized that we had picked up an extra hour going from Eastern to Central Standard Time, so we were drifting along without being in too much of a hurry, and then something happened. We had a flat. It was the left rear tire, and it happened where the road is very narrow, but very heavily traveled. We could just barely get off the highway to change that tire, and it seemed that right then all the trucks and busses in Kentucky started coming our way. I had to get down on my knees to take that tire off. That meant that my heels were pretty far out on the highway, and for the first time in my life I wished that I was a very short man, because it seemed to me that every car that passed was at least going to knock the heels off my shoes.

Mrs. Johnston had gotten herself all fixed up for our trip and that included a manicure and her nails were polished up so prettily that it would have been a crime to have marred their shining surface with anything like Tennessee dust, and our car and wheel were prettily heavily coated. She wanted to help change that tire, but I would not let her do anything but hold the bolts when I took them out. It did not take us but fifteen minutes to make the change, but it took us more than thirty minutes to recover our composure afterwards, and all of that caused us to be a little late in reaching our destination. We were thirty minutes late for that supper, which meant that we had just that much extra appetite to satisfy, but Nellie had anticipated something like that and had an extra supply of food to take care of the occasion. Bill had to wake up little Jane Ann who had gone to bed by the time we arrived, just to show us that all the things he had said about this little girl were not exaggerations nor flattery, but just the modest truth. Little Jane Ann looked a little bewildered but was willing to accept us as belonging to the family, although she did not quite know how.

On Friday Bill took the two of us on a tour down through Shelbyville, Frankfort, Versailles, Lawrenceburg, and Tyronne, and we saw something for the first time that we did not even know existed, the Grand Canyon of the Kentucky River. Now, don't go trying to compare the Grand Canyon of the Kentucky with the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. The Colorado has been at the job for about two billion years we understand, starting out by cutting its Canyon through the Kaibab limestone and then on down for another mile. Well, the Kentucky River has cut down through limestone strata and created quite a gorge. The city of Frankfort is in that gorge and the Tyronne Power Company up the river from Frankfort is in that gorge. Bill took us there. It is a steam electric plant operated by the Kentucky Utilities Company, an immense affair, generating steam at 900 pounds pressure and that steam turning turbines to generate electricity to send all over the state. Well, we were prepared to enjoy seeing this miracle of turning 15 carloads of coal into electricity (its daily quota), and while we were in there something happened. It seems that one of the men turned a valve to pack the stem of the valve in order to stop a leak. That valve happened to have something to do with the feed water supply to one of the boilers, and in just no time at all the alarm whistles on that boiler commenced to play a tune and by the time they found out what the trouble was something else turned loose, and we thought an explosion was starting. In just a few minutes everything was under control again and going as before, but we were told that the effects of that few minutes' shut-down of one boiler was felt all over northern Kentucky in lowered voltage. Don't ask me to explain: I am just telling you what they told me.

The Southern Railroad crosses the Kentucky River at Tyronne on a bridge that was built sixty years ago. It is a beautiful thing: from a distance it looks like a spider's web, but it is not rugged enough to carry the heavy tonnage of today's big trains, but it is still used on this branch line under strict limitations. It is a pity that such a beautiful structure could not be preserved as an antique for future generations to see and admire. The general manager of the Tyronne Power Company is named Bunch - a name that sounded very much like Iredell County. His energy and resourcefulness would indicate that he must be kin to the Bunches who have had so much to do with the developement of Iredell County.

The return trip was through Louisville where we were shown the results of the 1937 Ohio flood. The effects of that flood are still visible in places. It is unbelievable to think that a city could stand a catastrophe like that and survive. The pictures still on display as to the height of the water are unbelieveable. Today, not only Louisville but the cities across the way, are building flood walls to prevent anything like this happening to them again. Maybe they will never have to use that flood wall. It is to be hoped that before such a catastrophe strikes again the Ohio River will be under somewhat the same control that the Tennessee is today.

Saturday was spent visiting places of interest in Louisville in connection with Bill's work. I found that he did have to show up at his office once in awhile to let the railroad know that he was still working for it.

Bill took me to the railway yards. I had to climb over a train and climb up into the tower in the freight yards, but I saw what happened to the freight trains when they came in and were broken up and made into new trains to leave. A lot of figures were fed to me - the only one I seem to remember is that something like 5,000 cars are processed through that yard every day, and one man seemed to have his finger on the whole transaction - the man in the tower. He had equipment before him enabling him to talk to any place on the yard. One moment an incoming conductor would ask him a question and he would locate the man at the other end of the yard to answer it. One train was getting ready to leave and they could not find the conductor. This man in the tower began calling for the conductor, up through the yard went the loud speakers as he would tune in one after another. Finally the conductor was located and in less than five minutes was on his train which was moving out. As a train would come into the yard (sometimes at a pretty fair rate of speed) every car number would be recorded and in just a few minutes, not only the car numbers but the destination of each car would be in the hands of the man in the tower.

I could have spent many days watching this performance without losing interest.

Sunday morning the important event of the whole visit took place. Little Jane Ann was baptized and the pastor of the Church insisted that the grandparents have a hand in it, so there was quite a procession that went down the aisle for the baptism of this one little mite. Bill sang in the choir, so he came down to meet the party in front of the pulpit. I carried the baby. Nell and Mrs. Johnston came along. The minister asked me to hold the Baptismal Font, and then he baptized the baby. I do not know whether he did it purposely or not, but when he caught sight of my height he stopped on the last step of the pulpit steps rather than coming down to the floor. That made him just my height. Little Jane Ann behaved beautifully and the ceremony to us was a wonderful one.

Sunday afternoon was the time for visiting friends and getting ready for an early start home on Monday morning. Well, we pulled out at twenty minutes before eight, and coming east as we were, we lost an hour so that made it twenty minutes to nine, Barium Springs time.

We journeyed down through Shelbyville, Frankfort, Georgetown, Paris, and on through the part of Kentucky and Virginia where the principal industry is coal mining. We will not try to describe that. You would not believe it. One time we passed a string of empty coal cars that must have been five miles long. They were new cars, and we found out that they were simply parked there for the next days business.

Later on we passed through a valley and met three trains leaving that valley with loaded coal cars. We counted the cars in the first train and there were up in ninety. The other two were just as long. These were just on one railroad from one mining enterprise or valley. It makes you wonder what becomes of all of that coal, but when you visit a power plant like that one at Tyronne you wonder where all the coal comes from.

It began to rain on us late Monday afternoon so we did not try to make it on home, but stopped for the night at a little place on the top of the mountain near Richlands, Virginia. This is where highway 460 meets highway 19. It is right on top of a mountain and it is a place where the trucks make their stops. It is called Farmer's Inn. An all-night restaurant is run and it has a juke-box maybe two juke boxes, and our room for the night was squarely over this. Well, you would think that it would have disturbed us. Somehow it did not. I do not believe anybody could drive the trip that we did and fail to sleep at night, regardless of what sort of noises might be about.

We got up for an early start and what appeared to be a beautiful day. Down through the valley to Lebanon, Virginia, across the mountains to Abingdon, and across some more mountains to Damascus, and then we slipped into North Carolina through Boone and on down through North Wilkesboro and home, arriving home at eleven o'clock on Tuesday morning. It was foggy when we came through the gap into Boone, so foggy in fact that we had to keep our lights on and we could not see any of the magnificent scenery around Low Gap and the other places in the mountains coming down to North Wilkesboro, but the fog had dissipated by the time we came through Statesville, and Barium Springs was there before us. We had only been away six days, but we both can truthfully say that that was the most wonderful scenery of all. It seemed to us that the flowers had grown, the grass was greener and everything was more beautiful than when we left, and the greetings from our big family at Barium made it all perfect. The nicest thing about going away is coming back.

CAMPUS NEWS

ANNIE LOUISE COTTAGE

Hi Friends,

Just think, six more weeks of school and then summer vacations. We have gotten our report cards for the past six weeks but some of us didn't do so well. The girls that got bad conduct cuts saw rulers floating around in the air coming home from school.

Sylvia and Shelia Wilson, who left us this summer came by to see us the other Sunday. They have grown so much we hardly knew them.

Three new girls have been added to our family but we lost two of our older girls who moved to Howard. We received from Baby Cottage, Jackie Taylor, Virginia Kiser and a new child, Nancy Mobley. We are happy to have these girls added to our family.

We have been to see "Eggs from Texas" with Roy Rogers playing.

We have been to see a few good plays with some of our girls taking part in them. The fifth and second gave "Jack and the Magic Beanstalk". We also got to go to Cool Springs to see Cinderella. This was given by the Cool Springs high school.

Some one told us the other day that worms work a garden. Well all we can say is that we are the worms that work our garden.

We are planing a big Easter egg hunt Easter if the weather is good. We wish all our many friends could be with us but we will be thinking of you.

One of our little girls can't tell the difference between pigions and geese. The other day she saw some pigeons out side and said, "I didn't know we had any geese around Barium. We soon got her straight on that subject.

We are going to have to lay off saying anything about our teachers because we couldn't find enough hiding places to hide in last time.

Addie McEwen saw one of our big girls yawning real big one day and with out thinking said, "Don't you know when you "Yap" you are supposed to put your hand over your mouth?" She didn't relize what she had said until every one laughed.

We sincerely hope all of you will have a wonderful Easter.

Until next month.

HOWARD COTTAGE

Hi Folks,

Here we are back again bringing the cottage news.

We have had two more girls to move in our cottage. They are Virginia Baucom and Bernice Kuykendall. They both take piano which makes us eleven piano students. Now we have a cottage of twenty-six girls.

Mr. Grier has come back from Florida. When he came he brought a real lot of sea shells. We are having a lot of fun playing with them.

We are proud to say that Laura Jane Craig, Lois Dellinger and Linda Inman have recited the Shorter Catechism. Miss Taylor and Miss Jackson took them to Charlotte. When they came back they told us what a good time they had. Now everybody is studying the Catechism so they will get to go to Charlotte.

When we got our report cards we were happy to find out that twelve girls had made the honor roll. We are hoping to keep the good work up.

Some people from Fuller Memorial Presbyterian Church sent each of us a corsage, a pair of socks, and hair ribbons. The socks and hair ribbons are sorted colors.

We will have another piano recital the twenty-sixth of this month. We will each play a solo.

Shirley Hall, Shirley Johnson, and Linda Inman got their clothing box this month. They were thrilled with them, They had some very pretty dresses.

Miss Brandon took her Sunday school class and her school class to camp Saturday. Sixteen of us went. We had a weiner roast and we went on a walk to Long Island and bought us some candy there. Everyone enjoyed the trip very much.
